In his mental health practice, Josh assist clients to understand and effectively access Arizona's uniquely complex mental health system, and counsels clients navigating through the civil commitment process. Josh frequently helps families implement a Mental Health Guardianship so they can properly advocate for their mentally ill loved ones. Additionally, a significant portion of Josh's mental health practice focuses on "psychiatric boarding," a situation in which clients are involuntarily and unlawfully held in an emergency room.

For four years after earning his undergraduate degree from the University of Arizona, Josh worked in Maricopa County's public mental health system. Before and during law school, Josh worked nights at Maricopa County's crisis line, the Crisis Response Network.
